THE CANADIAN FORCES SNOWBIRDS AMBASSADORS FOR THE CH.I.L.D. FOUNDATION

The Canadian Forces Snowbirds are Ambassadors for the CH.I.L.D. Foundation, the only charity in Canada so designated. On August 5, 2014 the Snowbirds 431 Air Demonstration Squadron met children with Crohn's Disease, Ulcerative Colitis and liver disorders at Landmark Aviation at Vancouver International Airport. The pilots answered a myriad of questions from the children..."do your wings ever touch?" (No!)..."are there any girl pilots?" (Yes!)..."do rockets make the smoke from the jets and where are the rockets?" (No, no rockets! Paint is put in the exhaust to make the smoke!)

Each year in a different city of British Columbia, "Snowbirds Fly for CH.I.L.D." takes place, thrilling thousands with a spectacular aerial demonstration, which took place in White Rock this year on the evening of August 6th. For the past 11 years, the CH.I.L.D. Foundation invites children and their families from the hosting community for a luncheon and to meet with the Snowbirds Pilots. It is the absolute highlight of the summer! The children are able to scramble among the jets, take photos with the pilots, and bring home autographed t-shirts and memorabilia from their experience.

The CH.I.L.D. Foundation is very grateful for the support of the Canadian Forces Snowbirds, Bombardier Inc., the Province of British Columbia, Ministry of Community, Sport and Cultural Development, Coralee Oakes, Minister and CH.I.L.D. CANADIAN CHILDREN INFLAMMATORY BOWEL DISEASE NETWORK: A JOINT PARTNERSHIP OF CIHR AND CH.I.L.D. FOUNDATION

In collaboration with the Canadian Institutes of Health Research (CIHR) and the Network Advisory Committee (NAC), the CH.I.L.D. Foundation has established a Task Force with a goal of establishing a comprehensive performance assessment framework to track the Canadian Children’s IBD Network’s impact. The goal of the task force is to define a balanced set of key indicators of network success, which will be used to inform the Network Advisory Committee and the Funders. A collaborative effort is envisioned for this important work. The Task Force will feature key representatives from the Network Advisory Committee – Dr. Claudio Fiocchi – International representative on the NAC from the Cleveland Clinic; the Canadian Institutes of Health Research – Mr. Paul Belanger; the Network’s Leadership Team – Dr. David Mack – Children’s Hospital of Eastern Ontario; and, the CH.I.L.D. Foundation’s Scientific Research Advisory Council – Dr. Aubrey Tingle and Tim Murphy. The Task Force will complete its work and report to the Network Advisory Committee in the fall of 2014.

The Network Advisory Committee to the Canadian Children Inflammatory Bowel Disease Network: A Joint Partnership of CIHR and CH.I.L.D. Foundation, met at SickKids Hospital in Toronto with representative research scientists in April, 2014. The next meeting will be held in November in Vancouver.

A CANADIAN FIRST: B.C. SCREENING PROGRAMME FOR LIVER DISEASE IN NEWBORNS

Early Detection of Biliary Atresia in newborns is crucial to quality of life, and, sadly, more often the case, to life itself. As of June of this year, a programme implemented by the Province of B.C.’s Perinatal Services will bring timely awareness to families.

There is no single blood test for Biliary Atresia, thus stool colour is the main tool for early detection. Dr. Richard Schreiber, Director of B.C.’s Pediatric Liver Transplant Program and Professor of Pediatrics at the University of British Columbia, has been the force behind the implementation of ‘stool cards’: “Poor outcomes due to late diagnosis and surgery of infants three months of age or older remain a problem throughout Canada and elsewhere in the world. We need to build awareness among parents and health care providers about the need to look at stool colour as a disease indicator.”

When a baby is discharged from the hospital, the parents are given a stool colour card to which they can compare their newborn’s stool. Chalk white, or clay-coloured stools is an indication that very little or no bile is reaching the intestine. The card can also be downloaded from www.perinatalservices.bc

NEW DISCOVERY ABOUT THE GUT'S IMMUNE DEFENSES MAY REVEAL THE CAUSES OF INFLAMMATORY BOWEL DISEASE

Highlighted in Cell Host & Microbe, August 13, 2014
Reprinted in part with kind permission from Child & Family Research Institute Feature Article August 25, 2014

An important discovery about how our gut protects our bodies from dangerous infections may help scientists understand the causes of inflammatory bowel disease. "We know that every food-borne bacterial pathogen that we encounter tries to infect the cells that line the gut, but until now it wasn't clear how these cells defended against infection," says Dr. Bruce Vallance, the senior and co-corresponding author on the study recently published in the journal Cell Host and Microbe. "We've discovered that these cells defend themselves against dangerous bacteria using groups of proteins called inflammasomes."

Inflammasomes are groups of proteins that work together to trigger an immune response. Previously, scientists thought that the cells lining the gut weren't able to make inflammasomes because these cells don't produce a protein called caspase 1. Scientists believed caspase 1 was a necessary component of inflammasomes because all known inflammasomes used caspase 1 as a building block. In collaboration with U.S. colleagues, Dr. Vallance's team discovered that the cells lining the gut do in fact make inflammasomes. Instead of caspase 1, inflammasomes in the human gut are made up of another protein called caspase 4. The way inflammasomes in the gut protect us from infection is also unique. When inflammasomes in the gut encounter dangerous bacteria, they separate from the intestinal lining and pass out of the body as waste, taking the bacteria with them. Other inflammasomes in the human body fight off infection mainly by triggering inflammation.

This discovery has the potential to improve understanding of the underlying causes of inflammatory bowel disease (IBD). Scientists now suspect that many people with IBD develop the disease because their intestinal cells don't properly activate inflammasomes, making them more susceptible to chronic bacterial infections. It's also possible that inflammasomes help repair damage to the intestinal walls, and that this healing function is impaired in people with IBD.

Every year at Children's Hospital, approximately 100 children are diagnosed with IBD. There's no cure for IBD and about one-third of patients eventually become resistant to current therapies. Dr. Vallance's lab was built and equipped with funding from the CH.I.L.D. Foundation. It is the first and only lab in British Columbia dedicated to finding a cure for IBD.

CH.I.L.D. Foundation funds crucial equipment for ground-breaking research.

"We intend to collect intestinal samples from IBD patients who are not responding to current treatments – grow their cells into gut balls, and then test how these intestinal lining cells respond to bacteria and other intestinal challenges, in order to better define why these patients have IBD," says Dr. Vallance. "We hypothesize that the gut balls grown from IBD patients will be leakier than those coming from non-IBD patients. They may also show exaggerated inflammatory responses to bacteria or food particles. These results will help us to optimize treatments for our IBD patients."

The CH.I.L.D. Foundation Lab at Children's Hospital is only the second lab in Canada to adopt this technique – (the other is at SickKids Hospital in Toronto that shared this strategy with Dr. Vallance because of a collaboration initiated through the Canadian Children Inflammatory Bowel Disease Network: A Joint Partnership of CIHR and the CH.I.L.D. Foundation). The CH.I.L.D. Foundation has recently provided funds for the acquisition of a microinjector, the use of which will enable researchers to test the effects of new drugs on intestinal cells from individual patients to see if they have beneficial effects (ie. control their disease) prior to administering the drugs directly to the patient. Dr. Vallance believes this technique will ensure improved safety for pediatric patients and will ideally allow clinicians to provide improved personalized medicine for each child, "We anticipate that the system will significantly advance IBD research and treatment in British Columbia".

SNOWBIRDS LIFT SPIRITS WITH PERFORMANCE

Reprinted in part with kind permission from Peace Arch News

As the City of White Rock prepared to welcome the Canadian Snowbirds aerobatic team, Eric shared his story about living with Crohn's disease to Peace Arch News Staff Reporter Sarah Massah. The performance over Semiahmoo Bay on Wednesday, August 6, 2014 was aimed at increasing awareness of the CH.I.L.D. Foundation, which strives to find a cure for inflammatory bowel disease and ulcerative colitis.

Eric was 13 when he was first diagnosed with Crohn's, which can affect any part of the gastrointestinal tract. Now 21, Eric is encouraging others with the diagnosis to search for ways to manage the disease. "Most people don't know what it is. It's not a romantic illness. They don't make movies about Crohn's," he said. "What I would really like people to do who have the illness is to take control back. They have more power over their health than they think they do."

*It's not a romantic illness.
They don't make movies about Crohn's.*

While Eric currently keeps his Crohn's under control – for the most part – with a proper diet, usually, the first step for doctors is to prescribe medication. "For the first five years at Children's Hospital, I was given all kinds of medication," he said. "None of them ever did anything. At one point, they called in my parents because they thought they weren't giving the pills to me. They didn't think it was possible for me to be immune to all of them."

Soon after, Eric began looking at his diet and cutting out foods that cause flare ups. "That's been my real life saver, it's been the one thing that's kept me going," he said, noting he had been told in the past by a dietician that diet didn't affect Crohn's. "What I want people to know– and this is not me saying that doctors are evil or want to hurt you – but I feel too many people that go to the doctors with Crohn's or something more drastic than a broken bone, they want to put it all on the doctor. "But what I want people to know is that if you don't take responsibility for your health, you'll never know."

And while Eric admitted living with Crohn's has been a difficult journey, he said the most useful – and hardest – lesson has been learning how to be happy in a terrible situation. Even with medication and the right diet, the disease can flare up, he said. "You feel like crap... Everything falls apart. But you need to learn how to be happy despite that," he said. "I wouldn't have been here without people who love and support me. It's cliché, but it's cliché because it's the truth. I wouldn't be here today if it wasn't for them."

On August 6, 2014, Major Patrick Gobeil, Snowbird 1, Team Lead, and the Canadian Forces Snowbirds Team presented CH.I.L.D. Foundation Chairman of the Board Grace McCarthy, O.C., O.B.C. with the second Canadian flag ever given from the team.

This Canadian Flag was flown by 431 Air Demonstration Squadron, the Canadian Forces Snowbirds of the Royal Canadian Air Force, over Parliament Hill during Canada Day festivities on July 1, 2014 and is signed by all the pilots.

The crowd watching the presentation erupted into a standing ovation for such an honour. Thank you to Lieutenant-Colonel Christopher England, Commanding Officer, and to the entire Squadron.

FASHION FOR CH.I.L.D.

'Spring Time in Paris' experienced by three hundred 'tres chic' guests

The CH.I.L.D. Foundation was thrilled to return to The Fairmont Hotel Vancouver to present the latest Spring trends and fashions from West Vancouver retailers PHOENIX & ROMANTIQUE. As a sold out crowd made their way towards the crystal and gold Pacific Ballroom, they sauntered through displays of original paintings by volunteer artists, creating an ambience of an afternoon stroll through Paris! We were pleased to welcome the Consul General for France, Jean-Christophe Fleury, who brought original French flavors for the afternoon guests.

The CH.I.L.D. Foundation Inspiration Award was proudly presented to Major Miriam Catherine Merritt, a truly dedicated woman who inspires us all to become better, more involved citizens through her ongoing efforts and commitment to our community, specifically towards children in need. Major Merritt has worked tirelessly for decades, with faith and love in Salvation Army ministries, serving families and children.

The Consul General for France, Jean-Christophe Fleury, spoke at the Luncheon.

Major Miriam Merritt accepts the 2014 CH.I.L.D. Foundation Inspiration Award from Grace McCarthy and Mary Parsons. Miriam has devoted her life to families and children who need it most – the needy, the sick, and the disenfranchised.
